TRADING CARDS

Stonker Deck Collection by u/ClearEye2428

A foreword from the artist

Hello Apes,

The idea of the StonkerDeck Trading Cards came from my love of sports cards and my interest in documenting the moment.

They are designed to be fun, engaging and free to collect for all apes, under no circumstances are any of the cards meant to be interpreted as branding individuals as hero's of the community or moment...they are not, never have been and never will.

I ask each of you to enjoy and collect the cards because when the MOASS is over these cards could be valuable collectors items you get to share with your grandchimps.

Have fun and happy collecting.

A power struggle is rankling r/wallstreetbets, the Reddit forum that sparked the meme stock craze. And it likely all comes down to greed.

Starting on Wednesday the 3rd, at least three moderators for r/wallstreetbets posted that they had been banned from the forum, allegedly in a hostile takeover executed by older moderators. "We've been taken hostage by the top mods," wrote the user "[illegible]" in a now-deleted but archived post. "They fell for years and come back when they smelled money."

It appears over a dozen users who were added to r/wallstreetbets as moderators eight or nine months ago have since been removed.

Another two moderators have resigned from their roles in protest and moved to a new subreddit at r/wallstreetbetsnest, where they're accusing the old guard of trying to cash in.

The original founder of r/wallstreetbets, Jaime Rogozinski, this week sold the rights to his life story to a movie production company, according to The Hollywood Reporter.

In the meantime, those on r/wallstreetbetsnest are calling on Reddit to restore the banned moderators to the original forum. Reddit didn't immediately respond to a request for comment.

Cramer was on Market Alert back in May when flipped his shit over comments from Apes on Twitter and Reddit.

He was asked "How worthless has this place become?" Cramer responded "[redacted] the only person I didn't block was someone who had a cat picture." He continued "It's all these diamond whatchas they will do anything to distract you the hell more

Cramer continued mumble shots in the direction of wrinkle brained primates "No too far don't like that one I've been working and like a demon

However the meltdown was topped off with the comment "Yeah I went to Harvard to get stupid!" Well Mr Cramer, Apes have shown you and your co-workers that you can go to Harvard and still get fucked by a bunch of home schoolers.

Robinhood has added new limits to its app to restrict users from buying or trading any of the popular Reddit r/WallStreetBets stocks, including GameStop [$GME], AMC [$AMC] and, BlackBerry [$BB]. Users will still be allowed to close out existing positions but won't be able to buy more of the stocks.

Quite a number of Robinhood users expressed their surprise on social media today that the app was selling off their stakes, and we tracked down a dozen of them. These traders didn't believe they had prompted the sales, and they said they weren't aware of anything on their account that would have automatically triggered them.

"I didn't have any triggers to sell the stock whether it went up or down. I certainly wouldn't have put it at $193 when it had just been almost $500," Jeff Flores, who said he was holding stock in GameStop and AMC through Robinhood. A spokesperson for Robinhood said these small sellers are wrong about how their shares were sold. "I can confirm that claims that Robinhood proactively sold customers' shares outside of our standard margin-related sell-outs or option assignment procedures are false."

Robinhood warned some investors with options in GameStop and AMC that it may automatically sell off their stakes to reduce risk, the spokesperson said. But these investors told The Verge they didn't have options in GameStop or AMC and hadn't purchased the stocks on margin. They had purchased the shares outright, they said, and were planning to hold onto them.

Almost a fifth of ALL US dollars were created this year. The Zombies at "The Federal Reserve" have printed unprecedented amounts of money to support the coronavirus-stricken economy. It has sparked debates about inflation and helped asset prices soar.

Data from the Fed shows that a broad measure of the stock of dollars, known as 'M2' rose from $15.34 trillion (£11.87 trillion) at the start of the year to $18.72 trillion in September.

The printing press has increased rapidly since January with 23% of all USD in the circulation being printed in the last 12 months.

Since the early part of 2021 the Ape community on r/superstonk and [redacted] has gained many wrinkles through a series of Tit-Jacking DD's such as the 'Everything Short' put together by [redacted] superstonk MOD u/etchilli.

The article revealed the financial crash of 2008, that resulted in the bailouts of multiple participants to the tune of BILLIONS of dollars from the "FED" was never dealt with and put to bed, resulting in the proverbial can just being kicked down the road.

Oil never stopped, the zombie bankers have been printing money at an alarming rate for way to long and for all the wrong reasons. But it now makes sense thanks to the work of many DD creators on [redacted]superstonk.

These sneaky fucks decided to take a short trip to Brazil in March and left 100,000,000 synthetic GME shares behind in two completely bullish institutions.

Here is what we know so far:

1. Shorts have been kicking the can delaying closing their shorts in the hope of retail losing interest.

2. There's been a lot of new regulations that theoretically make it harder to kick the can.

3. Put contracts for 100 million shares of GME appear on a Bloomberg Terminal for "Constancia Investments" and "Kapitolo Investments" filed in MARCH.

* I suspect that when the MOASS is said and done these companies will be linked to the known shorts CITADEL, POINT 72, MELVIN CAPITAL and SUSQUEHANNA. And regulatory agencies will say they didn't know.*
